Editor's note:

Today's edition of Sidelines is a one off, half the size of a normal issue. From Monday we will be carrying full results & schedules, match reports and the best shots from our official photographers. Drop into the Info Centre and let us know if there's something you'd like to see in a future issue.

Welcome to the European Ultimate Championships 2007

And welcome to Southampton. If you have never been to an international tournament like a European Championships hopefully your first experience will be one to remember. Or perhaps EUC 2007 is the latest stop in a long career at the top of our sport - we can only hope that this week will live up to the high standards set by previous events.

Or maybe you are here seeing the game for the very first time - in which case a huge welcome to our sport! You might like to take a look at the EUC 2007 programme, available from the Info Centre, where we have included a guide to watching ultimate, previews of the divisions and profiles of some of the teams you will see here in Southampton.

This afternoon we will get a chance to gather together in the stadium for the Opening Ceremony to mark the start of EUC 2007. A big thankyou to Zoie Golding and all the kids at Fuzzy Logic for putting on a great show for us - we hope you will stick around to enjoy some ultimate.

At 16:00 there will be a Showcase game in the stadium between two of the favourites in the Women's division. Second seeds GB will take on Germany - good luck to them, and to everyone.

Double your happiness with two chances to win

Every day of EUC 2007 there will be two prize draws to enter. For your first chance to win head over to the Info Centre where you can purchase tickets for the EUC 2007 Prize Draw.

We will be making the draw at 17:00 every day. For 20p each your tickets will stay in the draw all week - so the sooner you enter the more chances you have to win. There are loads of prizes each day - you could be one of the lucky ones every time!

You could win official EUC 2007 merchandise courtesy of our sponsors Gaia Europe. Simply take the flyer from your welcome pack to the Gaia store in the Player Village to enter their daily prize draw. You can also take part if you're not a player - ask at the store to find out how.

The first day of play at EUC2007 sees teams battling with nerves to establish themselves and a wonderful performance from Fuzzy Logic kicks things off in the opening ceremony

Stars of the Showcase

EUC 2007 got under way officially with a colourful opening ceremony celebrating Southampton's cruise liner heritage and Britain's famous weather. Fuzzy Logic, a dance group from local schools, put on a great show despite a fuse blowing in mid dance! The stadium seats were full and there was anticipation as the tournament's first showcase game got underway. The EFDF wanted a close game to open the tournament and give the crowd some excitement and they chose Great Britain v Germany women. With the teams having met a number of times in their pre tournament warm-up preparations, this game was eagerly awaited by everyone.

Both teams got their first game nerves out of the way earlier in the day. Britain played Switzerland and according to Sue Pioli, one of the GB team captains, GB, "were a little bit overexcited in the first half." The score was 5-5 before GB put on a few scores after a time out. The famously cheeky (read clichéd) GB supporters were heard saying, "There were more holes in GB's defence than in Swiss cheese." After half GB pulled away to win 17-7.

In the other early game, Germany dispatched Ireland much more easily. The German cutting was hard and the Irish defence had no way of stopping the offence flow.

Both GB and Germany came on to the stadium pitch to cheers from their supporters but it was GB who settled in the quickest. They went 5-0 up, watching their rivals suffer a first pass offence miscommunication and a series of quick turnovers. GB weren't without mistakes though - a number of hucks were blocked or drifted out of the pitch downwind. Deutschland stepped up their game and got some scores to make halftime 9-5 down.

The second half allowed Germany to get back into the game a lot more. They got a break when Margit Mueller scored after Silke Oldenburg got a block on the scoring endzone. The crowd were yelling for a layout as there was a chance of a Callahan. The game got closer, the red, black and yellow crowd cheering on the German defence to some blocks. At 15-12 it felt close but GB won comfortably in the end, 17-13.

Both teams chose to play man defence, although GB tried a couple of successful zone points after time outs. But really it was mistakes rather than defence that dictated the game. On certain points the German team could swing patiently, on others, they turned quickly. The GB offence was much slicker, Sally Fraser having a great game handling and taking some big catches in the air. Gemma Taylor also played well, often free in the endzone.

For Germany, Catrin Schrieber had big throws and some tasty inside-out breaks which got the supporters singing. It seems both teams have still got areas to work on, but GB definitely walk away the happier.

A shock result in the showcase game sees Germany firmly establish themselves in the Junior Open Division.

Calm Germany frustrate Sweden to take the Game 17-4

The first big game in the Junior Open division witnessed a confident German team come up against a Swedish team tipped to go all the way. Earlier in the day the German coach Claas Michaelis had expressed his intent for his team to take the title. He said, "We have a calm offence and solid mental game, so I am confident we can go all the way." In the lead-up to the showcase game the Germans had convincingly beaten the Czech Republic and France. However, the team had not been pushed to perform - as Claas commented, "The Czechs did not punish our mistakes, but the Swedes will."

Things were different for the Swedes. I arrived at their first game of the day to find them trading out with the surprise package of the division, Austria. The Swedish offence looked frustrated with the inventive defence of the Austrians, but eventually they capitalised on a series of turnovers and began to pull away. Swedish coach Emil Lindmark said, "This [Austria] game had been tougher than the game against Germany will be." He was confident that they would beat Germany, "We will win... I think the score will be 17-13."

So going into the final the Germans looked to have a stronger mental game, but faced a Swedish team that had already overcome some strong opposition. The game that unfolded confirmed Claas' confidence in his German team's mental game.

The Germans started the first half in dominating fashion, with some well drilled horizontal offence and strong defence which troubled the Swedes. The Swedes regularly turned over, and some fast paced offence on the turn left them standing. At 7-1 to Germany, Swedes called a timeout to stem the flow but the Germans came out with a zone which frustrated the Swedes - insufficient handlers and poorly timed cuts up field led to mistakes, which the Germans converted quickly.

After half, the Swedes changed their defence to a poach man which stifled the Germans, but blocks by Sweden weren't converted and the Germans went 10-1 up. A few long points perhaps suggested tiredness - the German zone continued to trouble the seemingly inexperienced Swedes. Calm handling, notably from Christoph Koeble with some well executed hammers, kept the scoreboard for the Germans ticking over.

The Swedes' zone-offence started to work towards the end of the game. A hammer from Marcus Mattsson to a layout grab from Daniel Fernstrom was great for the crowd, but it was all too late. The Germans tidied up the game to take it 17-4. A huck to Christoph Koeble rounded off an excellent game for him.

Carl Brookes & Russell Scott

"We will win... I think the score will be 17-13."

GB Women Look to the Future

We arrived at a sun kissed pitch 15 to see the future of GB ultimate being introduced to some of the key figures of the GB Women's squad. Coach Anja Haman, along with players Alia Ayub, Aura Mackenzie, Sue Pioli, Gemma Taylor and Lindsay Wilkinson were running a coaching session with the two GB Junior teams.

The session was a product of the links that have been developed between the Women's and Junior Women's squads as part of the build up to the World Championships in Vancouver next year.

"We want to have strong links between our Women and Junior players, in order to build on a recent success in Latvia and build a strong squad for Vancouver," Gemma Taylor

After a quick clinic to pass on some catching expertise, the Junior women received a valuable session on playing zone courtesy of coach Anja Haman. But rather than dictate what they thought the Juniors should know, the GB Women had asked prior to the event what areas the Juniors would like to cover. This is an approach welcomed by the Juniors themselves. Kate Farmer of GB Juniors 1 said:

"The GB Women attended one of our training sessions prior to Euros, they provided us with their contact details so we could ask them questions directly and asked us what we would like to work on. They have also been prominent on our sideline during games."

It is reassuring to see this work between the experienced players and their junior counterparts. Not only are the GB Women passing on skill and experience, but they are also providing the Juniors with role models. This is an innovative approach to coaching that should prepare the Juniors well for their trip to Vancouver.

Sweden beat France but first half is blighted by heckling and insults

Bad Spirit Spoils Exciting Game

With AC/DC providing the backing track to their warm up, the Swedish open team looked unphased by their upcoming encounter with the surging French who had already beaten Finland in their first pool. Sweden's coach Martin Filipovski put this down to the belief they had in their tactics of stifling the frantic French offence;

"We intend to play our zone to stop the French offence, we know they are not used to playing against a zone."

Running drills in the opposite endzone, the French team clearly had nothing but the game on their mind. Were the French capable of another upset?

As the two teams lined up on their endzone, each team was aware of the intense 100 minutes that awaited them. The Swedish team oozed conviction and self-belief while the French were showing signs of anxiety.

The first pull went up from the French and within 7 minutes they found themselves 4-0 down due to an inch-perfect Swedish long game. A time-out was called giving the French time to breathe and open up their scoring.

However what followed in this half was a disappointing lack of spirited play. The French handlers who had been rocked by the physical Swedish defence began to assert themselves on the field. Calls were made which were met by insults shouted from the Swedish sideline and the French found themselves unable to ignore malicious remarks such as 'Cheating French' intentionally voiced in front of their own sideline and things were just as heated on the pitch.

Unfortunately EUC staff had to be drafted in to restore spirit on the sideline. The atmosphere was diluted as France added to their total but were unable to overcome the formidable zone D of the Swedes. They closed out this aggressive half at 9-6.

The mood in the French huddle at half time appeared flat and their chants were hollow, with key figures such as Faissoil 'Face' M'bae looking frustrated with his team's performance. The Swedes in comparison maintained the same ice cold composure with which they had entered the game; their D line even daring to show a smile.

The second half witnessed better, if not exemplary, spirit from the two teams. The French handlers began to make progress through the Swedish D and demonstrate their skill with lightening quick short passes as they scored to make it 9-7. The game suddenly stepped up a gear as the next point lasted 13 minutes with two time outs called and a handful of turnovers. The Swedes showed their experience to take the game to 10-7, despite losing this key point, a glance down the field to the French line saw their players eager to get on the pitch to have another go at breaking the Swedish zone. Had the French found their fight?

They pushed the Swedes with some more lengthy points, but ultimately the answer was "no." As they tried to match the Swedes' physical offence they were met with confident boxing from the tall Swedish receivers.

The Swedish pace never let up. While the French team staggered dazed and breathless along the sideline the Swedes maintained their confident composure, taking the game 17-8 and justifying their high seeding in this tournament.

Coaching Initiative is a Success

Away from the high intensity games of the tournament another, smaller, but equally important activity is happening at EUC. All week, between 10 and 2, EUC 2007 is running a 'Give it a go' session for the general public on the artificial pitches. The training is being run by May Tyrrell, of local team Ltd Release, who coaches 40 minute sessions to introduce the fundamentals of the game.

In these sessions, May, along with the sports camp organiser Lizzie Phillips and volunteer helper Jason Toeh, teaches the kids the basics of ultimate, including backhand and forehand throws and the general principles of the game.

The sports camp, which is run by the University of Southampton recreation and sports department, takes place for 4 weeks during the school summer holidays every weekday from 8.30am to 5.30pm. During these weeks the children will get to play all types of sports including tennis, cricket, swimming, football, athletics and of course ULTIMATE.

First impressions of the session left me thoroughly surprised, with not only nearly all the children having heard of ultimate, but with many of them having played before as well. The kids seemed to pick up the backhand quickly as one might expect, but I was also impressed by the natural ability of the catching on show and was witness to some excellent sidearms.

Don't forget the EUC 2007 prize draw - all money raised money goes to funding the teaching and increasing the awareness of ultimate in schools in the local community.

GETTING PAID FOR ULTIMATE

Will Parker and Russell Scott speak to players about the difficulty of getting sponsorship for Ultimate.

With virtually all ultimate teams self funded, players are often on the look out for financial help. Yesterday we interviewed a few of the teams sporting sponsors' logos to find out how they secured their endorsements and the benefits for both parties from these links. The Finnish Masters team are one of the most sponsored teams at the tournament, with support from international companies such as Hitachi and Sony Ericsson, a high tech software company (Tracker) as well as local business (Frezza coffee).

When asked how his team approached sponsors Timo Vaskio of the Finnish Masters replied, "We have a number of contacts as part of our day jobs. We put together a professional proposal and make sure that companies know how much time and effort we dedicate to our sport."

In addition to their own interests teams must think about what each company is trying to gain. Mad Croc, who sponsor the Finnish Masters as well as the F1 driver Heikki Kovalainen, are trying to move their sports drink brand into the UK. One successful technique for giving something back to the sponsor is offering to run team building days based on ultimate. Having coaching from an international standard player is an attractive prospect for company publications.

The Dutch squad have also had luck getting sponsorship. They support the charity Right to Play - something that appealed to their sponsor Royal Haskoning. Two of the squad, Roelof Wentzel and Suzanne Poych, work for the company and helped organise a deal that gave the Dutch squad free kit.

Si Hill of GB Open also knows that a successful deal means giving something back to the company. "There are not many spectators in the sport yet and so you must think about other ways of helping them out." Si believes it helps to promote the distinctive aspects of Ultimate such as spirit of the game, dedication of the athletes and the lack of referees. Si also thinks there is scope for companies sponsoring individual players, something that is currently uncommon.

Ville Haaremo of the Finland Open team knows that sponsorship can be a long term relationship. His team is sponsored by the energy company Helsingin Energia. Ville is very appreciative of this and hopes that as their relationship develops along with the sport they will receive even better funding. For the time being, as Sports Marketing graduate Michael von Luijn from Netherlands Open says, "with a lack of spectators and TV coverage, it is very difficult to obtain sponsorship."

RIGHT TO PLAY

Sitting by the side of pitch 8 Michiel von Luyn of the Dutch Open team was talking to me about his desire to help support the global charity 'Right to Play'.

This is a charity that has a vision - every child should have the right to play sport.

The Dutch national squad in conjunction with the Dutch Flying Disc Association is using their time at EUC2007 to help spread the message of 'Right to Play' and its commitment to using sport to promote better living for disadvantaged youth.

As athletes we should support this cause.

Prior to EUC2007 the Dutch Squad purchased a batch of wrist bands (pictured on the back page) to give out to their opponents in the spirit circle, to help contribute to the organisation's funds. Michiel has been involved with 'Right to Play' for three years now and is keen to make it a key part of the Dutch ultimate scene.

GB Juniors thrive on Competition

Juniors welcome the intense competition and support from their sponsors Lookfly.

The future of Ultimate in the UK is looking bright. As past junior stars Keith Hodgson and Matt Beavan make waves in the GB open squad, the up and coming juniors in Nick Sampson's current GB Junior squad are promising big things. Giacomo Maltman and Matt Hodgson spoke to me after their emphatic 17-7 victory over Switzerland. "The competitiveness is greater than I expected, but the team are in great shape, we've been lucky to avoid injuries so far," said Matt, a local to the tournament.

Both players were thrilled with their win over Germany on Tuesday evening. "Coming from 14-10 down to win the game 16-15 was a highlight of the tournament so far," said Giacomo, who many in the game have called the most exciting young player in the UK.

The Juniors have received a great deal of support from UK performance ultimate gear manufacturers Lookfly. Giacomo was certainly impressed, "The kit is a massive improvement on the previous year's, so much lighter and smoother. The kit bags we got as part of the players pack are genius too."

GB juniors have only lost one game, their opener to Austria. Coach Nick Sampson is optimistic that it will be different story when the team meet again, most likely in the quarter finals.

EUC2007 Round Up

Surge Radio's sports presenter David Howell sums up the tournament highlights so far..

As the tournament nears its conclusion – with four finals taking place on the show pitch today – it is worth looking back on the five days of action that have taken place already. There have been dramatic close matches and some big upsets.

Possibly the best example of both took place in the Open division on Wednesday, when third seeds Denmark were edged out by unfancied Ireland 19-18. The Irish – who finished last in 2003 – were thrashed 17-2 by rivals GB in their first match, but have come into their own since. Victory over France – who themselves pulled off a shock on Sunday by beating Finland – secured a quarter-final spot. Sweden and GB remain unbeaten and are on course to meet in what could prove to be a classic final.

In the Women's division, the surprise package have been debutants Switzerland; defeating the highly-rated but inexperienced Swedes was just the beginning, as they went on to defeat two more teams ranked above them – one of them the under performing Latvia, seeded eighth but unable even to defeat Tyro team Belgium. GB and Finland, the top two seeds, are both unbeaten.

In the Mixed division, some thought the Czechs would fail to live up to their second-seed status. But partly due to tactically placing of their stronger players on the mixed team, they have excelled, winning their first five games before losing to top seeds Germany. The Germans were victims of a huge upset earlier in the week, losing to bottom seeds Belgium and yesterday they lost out to a resurgent GB on show pitch in the Semi. It looks like performance on the day will certainly determine the winners in this close division.

Team GB remain unbeaten in the Masters division, but there have been plenty of surprises below them, with Austria and France exceeding their expectations and Italy failing to live up to theirs. The division has seen more than its fair share of close games too, no fewer than three games on Wednesday alone finishing 17-15!

"Some are talking up the chances of a clean sweep for GB"

The Junior Open division has seen shocks too. Great Britain lost their opening match to lowly-ranked Austria, who proved that result was no fluke by gaining several more impressive victories. The stunning comeback victory over Germany – winning 16-15 after trailing 14-10 – has given the hosts confidence, and a narrow win over Sweden yesterday marks them out as the team to beat. Third seeds Israel have struggled, only winning once.

The new U17 Open division has been dominated by the hosts, who have yet to allow an opponent to reach double figures. Top seeds Sweden have failed to live up to their billing, losing 15-3 and 15-0 to the hosts and also losing twice to Finland. In the other new division – Junior Women – GB's first team look destined for gold and will meet Sweden today.

Some are talking up the chances of a clean sweep for GB, but with plenty of surprises this week already, it would be daring to make such a prediction.

EUC Spectators

EUC2007 spectator David Pyne gives his first impressions of ultimate.

Under the shelter of the food stand beside pitch G5 I spoke with David Pyne, one of the catering staff for EUC2007, about his first experience of watching ultimate.

"I have some friends who play at university. But I didn't realise it was big enough to have its own tournament."

As an Electrical Engineering student at the University of Southampton, David hasn't had much time for sport but played rugby before starting his degree.

"It [ultimate] is a lot different, normally after a game of rugby there is a hand shake but here they huddle afterwards."

Having worked since the start of the tournament David only recently noticed the game ran with out any referees. But he was impressed to see that this system worked.

From a spectator's point of view he thought ultimate was good to watch, especially its fast pace and players throwing themselves about.

"I would definitely like to try it."

All Smiles

On Monday this week we received a news item that the Israeli Junior Open team had recorded their first win in an international tournament. We thought this deserved some coverage with so we put their team photo, smiles and all on the back page. Since then their enthusiastic face and boundless energy have rarely been absent from the tournament atmosphere.

Speaking with their coaches Chen Bankirer & Matthew Rhoads before the teams game with Austria I asked them about how the national team had developed.

"They have been playing for 2 years now, most of them started when they were 12-14 years old."

Last year the team went to the Junior Worlds in Boston USA.

"It was tough, they were playing against 19 year olds and it was a sharp learning curve. But they improved astronomically."

Their time in Boston seems only to have encouraged them further and these young players have soaked up the EUC2007 experience.

They made the most of the Trade Night with their white merchandise and the dynamic Star of David logo proving very popular. Meanwhile outside the social centre players Agmon (#4) and Yvden (#10) were wowing a crowd of players with their freestyle display.

The Israeli Juniors' enthusiasm for ultimate seems endless. Mid way through, our interview was interrupted as one of the girls had suffered a broken tooth as a result of slippery disc. However when I left five minutes later the tears were gone, replaced by a smile and concern for missing the game.

Chen admitted that they could have performed better after failing to live up to their third place seeding. However with their dedicated coaches and many years of playing ahead of them they are sure to develop into a strong team.

IMPORTANT INFO

There is a stomach bug going around we recommend you DO NOT SHARE your water bottles.

Smoother fibres mean less odours

Jump+Reach are excited about their new range of fabrics for this year.

When you think about it, ultimate players are lucky to have so much choice when it come to our kit. Ultimate kit is truly distinctive, adding to the sport's unique identity and I've never known a sport where manufacturers care so much about us sweating.

This year the people at GAIA Europe have released a new line of fabrics, in 17 colours for ultimate players to choose from. Central to this are their Flotech II garments, available in 'mid' and 'fly' weights. Not only do they have a spot of Spandex, giving them a great fit while showing off your ultimate physique, they have also been treated with 'Sanitized'.

'Sanitized' smoothes the fibres therefore stopping bacteria and fungi building up in the garment. I received one of the flyweight GAIA EUC2007 tops at the start of the week. Now, after a week of sweating it out in the media office, it's still fresh. I look forward to getting it out on the pitch.

GET READY

With Great Britain and Sweden finally playing each other in today's Open Division Final, Russell Scott reports on their semi final games and preparation for today's big game.

At 11:30 yesterday morning it seemed that our front page story was going to be dominated by two shock upsets in the Open semi-finals as both Sweden and Great Britain found themselves down at half time, 9-8 and 9-7 respectively.

Sweden were struggling to turnover a clam Finnish offence while the GB Offence line that had been so clinical all week were making unforced errors on the disc against Switzerland. However the performance of GB and Sweden teams left few in doubt that the games would soon turn around.

As Swedish Captain Martin Filipovski reassured the Swedish defence line that the blocks would come, on the opposite pitch GB coach Simon Moore was bellowing 'come on boys' to the GB Defence line.

The pep talks worked. Suddenly every Swiss cut was accompanied with a layout bid from GB, while the stars of the Swedish Defence line, David Wesley and Sebastian Sporrang, started turning over the Finnish offence with jaw dropping layouts. Sweden and Great Britain never let up with the relentless pressure from their D lines running the opposition into the ground.

With both teams eventually winning their semis 17-14, I decided to catch up with their Captains to ask them about their preparation for today's final.

Stretching after the game, Martin Filipovski told me that they had been surprised by the Finns' strong start.

"The Finns had a calm offence; we found it hard to get a block."

But Martin said the Swedes had confidence in their defence, and rather than grow agitated by the Finns they simply reassured themselves that "the blocks will come."

Such a self assured mind set will surely help the Swedes to keep their cool in the final.

To prepare for the final the Swedes will be meeting up to eat together before the final, to help them focus on today's. Martin commented that the atmosphere in the team is good and that they are looking forward to an intense game in front of the crowd.

I caught up with Si Hill while he was taking in an ice bath to help his body recover from the semi-final with Switzerland.

"Against the Swiss we had hoped for a tough game but ended up making it harder for ourselves than we intended."

Commenting on the Swedish team he believed that their tactic of a quick short throw followed by a huck deep is a big part of their game, but he is confident that they can close down the key play makers.

Great Britain's preparation will be a less formalised affair than their counterparts.

"We won't do anything special for preparation; these individuals are very professional and can take care of themselves."

With a full grandstand and good weather forecast for today, the Open final is set to be a great end to EUC2007.

Interview with Thomas Griesbaum

Thomas Griesbaum, President of the European Flying Disc Federation talks to us about successful tournament and the organisations plans to restructure.

Do you think EUC2007 has been a good advertisement for the sport?

"Yes certainly. Everyone has sent their best teams and the top four teams in the Open division are among the best teams in the world. This gives people the opportunity to watch ultimate at its best."

What do you think about Ultimate in Europe at present?

"It is getting better and better. The players themselves have found they need more international high level competition. This has made it possible for the European Ultimate Champions League, where the best 16 teams in Europe can advance to the finals to play each other."

What European countries do well to promote ultimate?

Britain does very well. The tour set up there does very well to get more teams playing and ultimate in the Universities is well established. Overall lots of countries do a lot to promote ultimate with varying success.

Are you pleased with the new teams entering this tournament?

Yes definitely. Despite the location of the tournament not being on the continent there have been double the amount entered that for EUC2003 in France. It is good to see new teams from places such as Eastern and South Eastern Europe.

What plans does the European Flying Disc Federation have for the future?

The EFDF has plans to restructure itself by creating federations for each flying disc discipline put together under one, slim, EFDF umbrella organization. This will provide one channel for communicating to outside parties rather than each discipline communicating separately as they do now. We hope that we will have enough volunteers to take up positions on these new committees.
